Perry Hall, MD – Jesse Colvin, candidate for Maryland’s 1st Congressional District, released a campaign ad on Friday, September 28, called “Duty”. The ad features Colvin explaining to his 5-month-year-old son why he chose to volunteer for four combat tours in Afghanistan and why he decided to run for Congress.

“Hey son, it’s your Dad, Jesse Colvin. I’m recording this so when you’re older you can see what duty means in our family,” Colvin says in the ad. “I served as an Army Ranger after 9/11, when some bad people hurt America. I went to Afghanistan four times to defend our homeland. My generation is putting country above politics as our duty to your generation.”

The ad is running on local broadcast television and on social media platforms such as Facebook and Twitter. You can view the full ad here.

After the 9/11 attacks, Colvin studied Arabic and Middle East History at Duke University. After graduating, he moved to Damascus, Syria to teach English to Iraqi refugees. The experience ultimately led him to volunteer for the Army, where he earned a coveted position in the 75th Ranger Regiment.

Colvin served four combat tours in Afghanistan as an intelligence officer in the Army Rangers. He led a team involved in kill/capture missions against leaders of al Qaeda, the Taliban, and other terrorist organizations.

Colvin’s wife, Jordan, previously served as police officer with the Metropolitan Police Department in Washington, DC. She now runs a non-profit trade association that supports organizations helping to prevent veteran suicide through the use of special trained service dogs.
